One Hard Question

6. You and your buddy are out hiking by yourselves, and he breaks a leg. He's in a lot of pain and shock is a real problem. Also, it's a bit cold and damp.

Assume that you do the required first aid, which is to treat for shock and splint the leg. What's the best thing to do now?

___ Stick with your buddy and hope that a search party finds you both. Prepare to spend the night. Get a campfire going and make sure that you have enough wood to last until morning. While it's still light out, make the fire very smoky to assist searchers. Build a shelter. Keep a watch over him and feed him whatever you've got with you. Give him hot liquids, even if it's just hot water.

___ You need some help as fast as possible. Do everything to keep your buddy comfortable without you. Start a smoky fire, and make sure that you leave enough wood and leaves so that he can keep it going by himself. Leave him all your equipment. Make sure he has lots of water. Take an item of clothing and cut it into strips. Move out quickly, but stop to tie a cloth strip to a tree every so often to make it easy for you or someone else to find the site again. Go!

___ Neither of the above. I think that the correct thing to do is
